UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA
CHARLESTON DIVISION

In re: Derivium Capital, LLC, Debtor.	Case No. 05-15042-JW Chapter 7
Grayson Consulting, Inc., Plaintiff, vs. Wachovia Securities, LLC, f/k/a First Union Securities, Inc., Wachovia Securities Financial Network, LLC, First Clearing, LLC; Morgan Keegan & Co., Inc.; and Janney Montgomery Scott, LLC, Defendants.	Adversary Proceeding No. 07-80119-jw

WACHOVIA'S REPLY IN SUPPORT OF ITS MOTION TO DISMISS THE AMENDED COMPLAINT AND MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT

Wachovia Securities, LLC, f/k/a First Union Securities, Inc. ("Wachovia Securities"), Wachovia Securities Financial Network, LLC ("Wachovia Financial Network"), and First Clearing, LLC ("First Clearing") (collectively referred to as "Wachovia" or the "Wachovia Defendants"), hereby reply in support of their Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint (the "Motion") [DE # 38], and in support thereof, state as follows:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Try as it might, Plaintiff cannot navigate around the in pari delicto and sole actor doctrines, legal principles that mandate dismissal of its Amended Complaint. Plaintiff's opposition ignores settled caselaw, cites to plainly inapposite and readily distinguishable authority, and fails to accept the consequences of the fact that it stands in the shoes of the alleged wrongdoer. On that flawed basis, Plaintiff asks this Court to reach the truly remarkable conclusion that a wrongdoer is entitled to recover from others for its own wrongdoing. That, of course, is not the law.

There are no disputed facts here and Wachovia submits that Plaintiff's common law claims are legally infirm and time-barred, and thus ripe for dismissal.[1]

ARGUMENT

. PLAINTIFF CANNOT AVOID DISMISSAL BASED ON THE IN PARI DELICTO DOCTRINE

In its opposition, Plaintiff argues that the doctrine of in pari delicto should not apply because: (i) Wachovia allegedly received some "benefit" from transacting business with Derivium; (ii) the Derivium Owners allegedly were acting "adverse" to the interests of Derivium; and (iii) application of the in pari delicto doctrine here allegedly would "lead to an inequitable result." (Pl.'s Resp. at 8-13.) Even accepting Plaintiff's factual premises, its arguments fail as a matter of law and common sense.

. Whether Wachovia Allegedly Received Some "Benefit" In The Form Of Professional Fees Is Irrelevant

Plaintiff's "benefit" theory fails for two reasons. First, the lone case cited by Plaintiff purportedly supporting this theory, Myatt v. RHBT Financial Corp., is readily distinguishable as it did not involve a bankruptcy trustee; rather, at issue in Myatt was the question of whether a receiver could pursue claims in the face of an in pari delicto defense. 635 S.E.2d 545, 546-47

[1] This Reply only addresses arguments concerning the in pari delicto doctrine and the applicable statutes of limitations. If Wachovia's position on either prevails, all of Plaintiff's common law claims fail as a matter of law. Wachovia will further address at oral argument why Plaintiff's other arguments directed to the common law and statutory claims are likewise legally deficient.

(S.C. Ct. App. 2006). As shown below, although there is authority holding that a receiver can avoid the defense of in pari delicto, courts have not allowed a bankruptcy trustee, who, unlike a receiver, stands in the shoes of the debtor, to avoid the fatal effect of this doctrine. Indeed, the case upon which Myatt relied in concluding that a receiver was not subject to the in pari delicto defense, has been rejected in the trustee-in-bankruptcy context.

In Myatt, which involved a receiver and not a trustee-in-bankruptcy, the South Carolina Court of Appeals relied on Scholes v. Lehmann, 56 F.3d 750, 754 (7th Cir. 1995), which held that in pari delicto was inapplicable to claims brought by a receiver. See Myatt, 635 S.E.2d at 547-48. In Scholes, as in Myatt, the Courts had no occasion to address how the analysis would differ were the plaintiff a trustee-in-bankruptcy, as opposed to a receiver. After Scholes was decided, courts have had that opportunity, and have expressly declined to extend that case to trustees-in-bankruptcy. See, e.g., Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors v. Edwards, 437 F.3d 1145, 1152 (11th Cir. 2006) (in pari delicto applied to claims at issue because, unlike the claims brought by the receiver in Scholes, the claims in that case were brought by a trustee); In re Hedged-Invests. Assocs., 84 F.3d 1281, 1285 (10th Cir. 1996) ("Though the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Scholes enjoys a certain appeal, both from doctrinal and public policy perspectives, we cannot adopt it in this case. Put most simply, [plaintiff] is a bankruptcy trustee acting under 11 U.S.C. § 541, and bankruptcy law, apparently unlike the law of receivership, expressly prohibits the result [plaintiff] urges.")[2]

[2] In Edwards, the court even went so far as to say that the argument that Scholes would apply to a trustee is a "flawed" one because "both the text and purposes of the Bankruptcy Code support the conclusion . . . that [the trustee's] complaint is subject to the same defenses that were available against a complaint filed by the debtor at the commencement of the bankruptcy." 437 F.3d at 1152. Moreover, as Wachovia previously demonstrated (Mot. to Dismiss at 9), circuit courts that have considered the issue have unanimously concluded that in pari delicto applies with equal force to a trustee-in-bankruptcy as to a debtor outside of bankruptcy. See Edwards, 437 F.3d at 1151 (citing Grassmueck v. Am. Shorthorn Ass'n,, 402 F.3d 833, 837 (8th Cir. 2005)); Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors v. R.F. Lafferty & Co., 267 F.3d 340, 356-57 (3d Cir. 2001); In re Dublin Sec., 133 F.3d 377, 381 (6th Cir. 1997); In re Hedged-Inv. Assocs., 84 F.3d 1281, 1285 (10th Cir. 1996); Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of

In short, Plaintiff's reliance on Myatt is misplaced.[3]

Second, courts that have considered the Myatt "benefit" argument in the trustee context have soundly rejected it. See Banco Industrial de Venezuela v. Credit Suisse, 99 F.3d 1045 (11th Cir. 1996) (rejecting argument that "it would offend public policy for the defendants as wrongdoers to retain their allegedly fraudulent gains" because "otherwise, [a party] that is found equally or even more culpable than the defendants . . . . could nevertheless recover for its own culpability); see also In re Dublin Sec., Inc., 133 F.3d 377 (6th Cir. 1997) (in pari delicto barred claims brought against law firm that prepared legal documents in connection with fraudulent public stock offering); Breeden v. Kirkpatrick & Lockhart, LLP, 268 B.R. 704, 706 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2001) (in pari delicto barred claims against defendant accountants and attorneys who, among other things, allegedly received fraudulent transfer of funds for services rendered to perpetrator of a Ponzi scheme); Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors of Color Tile v. Coopers & Lybrand, LLP, 322 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2003) (defendant accounting firm provided auditing and consulting services for debtor and its controlling shareholders); In re Mediators, 105 F.3d 822 (2d Cir. 1997) (in an action to recover monies fraudulently diverted from debtor, defendants consisted of bank that financed alleged fraudulent transaction and lawyers and accountants that facilitated transaction).

Color Tile v. Coopers & Lybrand, LLP, 322 F.3d 147, 158-66 (2d Cir. 2003)); see also Nisselson v. Lernout, 469 F.3d 143, 153 (1st Cir. 2006).

[3] Although this Court's decision concerning the in pari delicto doctrine in a related case, In re Derivium Capital, LLC, 380 B.R. 407, 417 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2006), references Myatt, in the briefing in that case, neither party advised the Court of the case law distinguishing between a receiver and a trustee-in-bankruptcy with respect to the applicability of the in pari delicto defense. In any event, the Court did not rely upon Myatt in deciding not to dismiss that case at the pleading stage. Rather, the Court relied upon the adverse interest exception, which as discussed in Wachovia's moving papers and infra, has no application where, as here, the allegedly adverse agents were also the sole actors of the wrongdoer.

. The "Sole Actor" Doctrine Applies Here And Renders the "Adverse Interest" Exception Inapposite

Plaintiff sticks its head in the sand, failing to address the logic of the sole actor exception, including why that doctrine necessarily is implicated by its own pleading and leads to its dismissal. Plaintiff does not argue (nor could it) that there is a factual issue here. Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that Derivium was owned and controlled by "The Derivium Owners," all of whom it alleges were responsible for the wrongful conduct of Derivium. (See, e.g., Am. Compl. ¶¶ 15-33; see also id. ¶¶ 34-61.) Plaintiff also does not (nor could it) challenge the logic behind the sole actor doctrine. And the two arguments Plaintiff does advance are easily disposed of.

Ignoring a critical distinction addressed in Wachovia's moving papers, Plaintiff suggests that the Court should defer this issue, as it did in a related case, In re Derivium, a case in which it held that the defense "did not clearly appear on the face of the amended complaint . . . ." 380 B.R. at 418. But as Wachovia previously explained, the defendants in that case were the wrongdoers themselves, and they naturally did not, and could not, seek to invoke the sole actor doctrine. (Mot. to Dismiss at 10, n.7.) Here, unlike in that case, the sole actor doctrine and in pari delicto defense do appear on the face of Plaintiff's pleading. No amount of discovery can change this fact.

Equally unavailing is Plaintiff's suggestion that the Court should simply ignore the sole actor doctrine because no court in the Fourth Circuit has had the occasion to address the point. The sole actor doctrine is firmly rooted in agency law and well recognized in all the jurisdictions that have considered it. See, e.g., In re Mediators, 105 F.3d at 827; Official Comm. of Unsecured Creditors v. R.F. Lafferty & Co., 267 F.3d 340, 355 (3d Cir. 2001); Nisselson, 469 F.3d at 155; Banco Industrial de Venezuela, 99 F.3d at 1048; First Nat'l Bank v. Lewco Sec. Corp., 860 F.2d 1407, 1418 (7th Cir. 1988); Breeden, 268 B.R. at 709; Coopers & Lybrand, LLP, 322 F.3d at 165; In re Dublin, 133 F.3d at 380; In re Senior Cottages of Am., LLC, 482 F.3d 997, 1005 (8th Cir. 2007). Plaintiff does not even discuss, much less refute, the common sense logic behind that fundamentally fair rule of law. Nor does Plaintiff point to a single decision in any jurisdiction rejecting the sole actor exception in a similar context.

. Applying In Pari Delicto Would Not Lead To An Inequitable Result; To the Contrary, Not Applying It Would Lead To Such a Result

Plaintiff's final attack on in pari delicto is its most confounding. Citing to a North Carolina decision (Pl.'s Resp. at 13), Plaintiff suggests that the doctrine should not be applied because, according to Plaintiff, it would frustrate principles of equity. Plaintiff's argument turns logic and equity on its head. The in pari delicto doctrine exists to prevent a wrongdoing plaintiff from reaping the benefits of its own wrongdoing. Derivium, according to the Plaintiff's own pleading, was a sham that was owned and controlled by a group of three individuals. By operation of law, when Derivium filed for bankruptcy protection, the Trustee stepped into the shoes of that alleged sham company. And when Plaintiff purchased this claim from the Trustee, it, in turn, stepped into the shoes of that alleged sham company. Common sense, equity, and settled law dictate that the wrongdoer, on whose behalf Plaintiff is suing, cannot recover against others for the wrongdoing of that alleged sham company.

Further, Plaintiff's attempt to focus on Wachovia's alleged conduct is misguided. Courts have recognized that it is of no moment that a defendant is alleged to have been a participant in the wrongdoing. See, e.g., Credit Suisse, 99 F.3d at 1051 (rejecting argument that "it would offend public policy for the defendants as wrongdoers to retain their allegedly fraudulent gains" because "otherwise, [a party] that is found equally or even more culpable than the defendants . . . could nevertheless recover for its own culpability."); Nisselson v. Lernout, 469 F.3d at 157 (rejecting trustee's argument that "in pari delicto doctrine would frustrate the purpose of the securities laws because it would allow participants in a fraudulent scheme to shield themselves from liability."); Estate of Bruner v. Bruner, 338 F.3d 1172, 1178 (10th Cir. 2003) ("'the parties are held in pari delicto and [e]quity will not relieve one party against another when both are in pari delicto; where both are equally in the wrong, defendant holds the stronger ground.'") (analogizing in pari delicto to "clean-hands" doctrine) (quoting Camp v. Camp, 163 P.2d 970, 972 (Okla. 1945)). Indeed, because a defendant seeking to assert the in pari delicto defense is, by definition, alleged to have been involved in some form of wrongdoing, were the rule as Plaintiff would have it, no defendant could ever invoke the doctrine.

*** *** ***

In this case, the facts are not in dispute and the law is clear. The in pari delicto doctrine mandates dismissal of all of the common law claims in the Amended Complaint – Counts One through Nine – with prejudice.

. PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMS ALSO ARE BARRED BY SOUTH CAROLINA'S THREE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Wachovia's statute of limitations defense, described by Plaintiff as "novel," "inartful," and a "misapprehension," is none of those things. Actually, it is straightforward. South Carolina has a three-year statute of limitations, which period begins to run after the person "knew or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known that he had a cause of action." See S.C. Code §§ 15-3-530, 15-3-535. And here, Plaintiff's own pleading establishes that Derivium knew of the alleged wrongdoing – and thus Plaintiff is deemed to know of the alleged wrongdoing – from the moment it began, which is long before the three-year limitations period expired.

In its opposition, Plaintiff seeks to have the limitations period tolled, effectively (although not explicitly) arguing that the Court should adopt the continuing tort doctrine. Under such a theory, Plaintiff contends that later alleged wrongdoing by Wachovia (i.e., alleged wrongdoing after the three-year period expired) would defeat its statute of limitations defense. (Pl.'s Resp. at 15-16.) But Plaintiff can cite nothing to demonstrate that South Carolina has accepted the continuing tort doctrine. The one case it cites to – Richland County v. Kaiser, 567 S.E.2d 260, 263 (S.C. App. 2002) – is to no avail. That case stands for the unremarkable proposition that a county of the State should not be barred by the doctrine of laches from enforcing a shrubbery ordinance, notwithstanding the fact that the offending property owner had apparently been in violation of the ordinance for years. The case did not involve tort claims and cannot be read to stand for the proposition that South Carolina has adopted the continuing tort doctrine.

In fact, just one year after Richland County was decided, the South Carolina Supreme Court did consider the continuing tort doctrine and it expressly and unequivocally declined to adopt it. See Harrison v. Belivacqua, 580 S.E.2d 109, 114 (S.C. 2003) ("Citing to Georgia law, petitioner also argues the Court should adopt the continuing tort doctrine. We disagree.").

Plaintiff also makes no effort to distinguish Grassmueck v. Am. Shorthorn Assoc., a case cited by Wachovia in its moving papers which it submits is directly on point. 365 F. Supp. 2d 1042 (D. Neb. 2004), aff'd, 402 F.3d 833 (8th Cir. 2005). The plaintiff there argued precisely what Plaintiff argues here – that the statute of limitations should not run because the alleged wrongful conduct continued over a period of years. The Court rejected the argument, noting that Nebraska law holds that a statute of limitations does not begin to run until the allegedly negligent conduct is completed, "unless the plaintiff has knowledge of facts constituting notice of alleged negligence and yet continues the business relationship with the defendant." Id. at 1051 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original). The Court went on to conclude that because the plaintiff's representatives had knowledge of their own fraudulent activities, that knowledge was properly imputed to the partnership entities and, as a result, the statute of limitations began to run when the representatives initiated – not completed – their fraudulent scheme. See id. at 1051-52. Respectfully, Grassmueck is directly on point and its logic compels dismissal.

Finally, in a footnote, Plaintiff urges the Court to essentially disregard applicable law and conclude that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the Trustee was appointed. As Plaintiff knows, that is not the law. It is fundamental law that a trustee is subject to the same defenses as could have been asserted by the defendant had the action been instituted by the debtor, and a statute of limitations defense is no exception. See, e.g., Lafferty, 267 F.3d at 356 ("if the debtor has a claim that is barred at the time of the commencement of the case by the statute of limitations, then the trustee would not be able to pursue that claim, because he too would be barred. He could take no greater rights than the debtor himself had.").

Because the debtor's (Derivium) common law claims were time-barred at the time this case was commenced, Plaintiff, standing in Derivium's shoes, is precluded from pursuing them.[4]

[4] Plaintiff's argument that its civil conspiracy claim somehow is subject to later accrual date fails because, among other things, Plaintiff has no civil conspiracy claim. See James v. Pratt & Whitney, 126 Fed. App'x 607, 611 (4th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (a claim for civil conspiracy must be "separate and distinct" from the other causes of action alleged by a plaintiff) (citing Todd v. S.C. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 278 S.E.2d 607 (S.C. 1981)). See also Pye v. Estate of Fox, 633 S.E.2d 505, 511 (S.C. 2006) ("the damages alleged must go beyond the damages alleged in other causes of action."). Accordingly, to the extent Plaintiff relies on the existence of this claim to fend off Wachovia's statute of limitations defense, that reliance is misplaced.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, the Amended Complaint should be dismissed, with prejudice.

This is the 21st day of April, 2008.

/s/ J. Ronald Jones, Jr.
J. Ronald Jones, Jr.
District Court I.D. 5874
CLAWSON & STAUBES, LLC
126 Seven Farms Drive, Suite 200
Charleston, SC 29492
Telephone: (843) 577-2026
Attorneys for Wachovia Defendants

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA
CHARLESTON DIVISION

In re: Derivium Capital, LLC, Debtor.	Case No. 05-15042-JW Chapter 7
Grayson Consulting, Inc., Plaintiff, vs. Wachovia Securities, LLC, f/k/a First Union Securities, Inc., Wachovia Securities Financial Network, LLC, First Clearing, LLC; Morgan Keegan & Co., Inc.; and Janney Montgomery Scott, LLC, Defendants.	Adversary Proceeding No. 07-80119-jw

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

The undersigned hereby certifies that copies of the foregoing Reply in Support of Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint was served on the following parties by placing said copies in the United States mail, first-class, postage prepaid, and addressed as follows:

Joseph C. Wilson, Esquire
District Court I.D. 5886
PIERCE, HERNS, SLOAN & McLEOD, LLC
Post Office Box 22437
Charleston, SC 29413
This the 21st day of April, 2008.

/s/ J. Ronald Jones, Jr.
J. Ronald Jones, Jr.
District Court I.D. 5874
CLAWSON & STAUBES, LLC
126 Seven Farms Drive, Suite 200
Charleston, SC 29492
Telephone: (843) 577-2026
rjones@clawsonandstaubes.com
Attorneys for Wachovia

126 Fed.Appx. 607
126 Fed.Appx. 607, 2005 WL 670623 (C.A.4 (S.C.))
(Cite as: 126 Fed.Appx. 607, 2005 WL 670623)

James v. Pratt and Whitney
C.A.4 (S.C.),2005.
This case was not selected for publication in the Federal Reporter.UNPUBLISHEDPlease use FIND to look at the applicable circuit court rule before citing this opinion. Fourth Circuit Rule 36(c). (FIND CTA4 Rule 36(c).)

United States Court of Appeals,Fourth Circuit.

Larry JAMES, Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

PRATT AND WHITNEY, United Technologies Corporation, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 04-1277.

Argued Dec. 2, 2004.
Decided March 23, 2005.

Background: Union aircraft mechanic brought action in state court against employer and aircraft engine manufacturer asserting claims of civil conspiracy, intentional interference with contractual relations, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Action was removed on diversity grounds. The United States District Court for the District of South Carolina, David C. Norton, J., dismissed mechanic's claims. Mechanic appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals held that:
(1) mechanic stated additional and independent acts in furtherance of conspiracy;
(2) mechanic stated that he suffered special damages; and
(3) manufacturer's involvement or procurement of discharge of employee in retaliation for his refusal to falsify records did not constitute outrageous conduct.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

West Headnotes

[1] Conspiracy 91 [redacted]18

91 Conspiracy
91I Civil Liability
91I(B) Actions
91k18 k. Pleading. Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 91k8)
Aircraft mechanic stated additional and independent acts in furtherance of conspiracy, for purpose of his civil conspiracy claim under South Carolina law, on allegations that aircraft engine manufacturer and employer conspired and acted to harm mechanic in retaliation for his refusal to falsify maintenance records on military aircraft which would have been in violation of his duty as mechanic, applicable Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) regulations, and would have put men and women of United States Air Force and civilian citizens of United States in danger of injury or death. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 8(a), 28 U.S.C.A.

[2] Conspiracy 91 [redacted]18

91 Conspiracy
91I Civil Liability
91I(B) Actions
91k18 k. Pleading. Most Cited Cases
(Formerly 91k20)
Aircraft mechanic stated that he suffered special damages, in that he lost money or other material temporal advantage capable of being assessed monetary value, for purpose of his civil conspiracy claim under South Carolina law, on allegations that he suffered lost wages, lost benefits, consequential economic damages, severe emotional distress, and injury to his reputation as mechanic and union member in leadership position.

[3] Damages 115 [redacted]57.58

115 Damages
115III Grounds and Subjects of Compensatory Damages
115III(A) Direct or Remote, Contingent, or Prospective Consequences or Losses
115III(A)2 Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress

115k57.50 Labor and Employment
115k57.58 k. Other Particular Cases. Most Cited Cases
Third party's involvement or procurement of discharge of employee in retaliation for his refusal to falsify records did not constitute outrageous conduct necessary for intentional infliction of emotional distress claim under South Carolina law.

607 Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of South Carolina, at Charleston. David C. Norton, District Judge. (CA-03-1022-2-18).
Chalmers Carey Johnson, Charleston, South Carolina, for Appellant.
Ellis Reed-Hill Lesemann, Cherie W. Blackburn, Nelson, Mullins, Riley & Scarborough, L.L.P., Charleston, South Carolina, for Appellee.

608 Before WILKINSON, Circuit Judge, W. CRAIG BROADWATER, United States District Judge for the Northern District of West Virginia, sitting by designation, and NORMAN K. MOON, United States District Judge for the Western District of Virginia, sitting by designation.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded by unpublished per curiam opinion.
Unpublished opinions are not binding precedent in this circuit. See Local Rule 36(c).PER CURIAM:
*1 Appellant Larry James filed this action on February 6, 2003, in the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Charleston, South Carolina, against Pratt and Whitney, United Technologies Corporation, asserting claims of civil conspiracy, intentional interference with contractual relations, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. After removal, the district court granted Pratt & Whitney's motion for partial judgment on the civil conspiracy claim and the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim. James seeks review of that decision. For the reasons set forth below, we hold that the district court did not err when it dismissed James's intentional infliction of emotional distress claim. We, therefore, affirm that portion of the district court's decision. We further hold, however, that the district court erred when it dismissed appellant's civil conspiracy claim. Consistent with this determination, we vacate that portion of the judgment of the district court and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I.

James is an aircraft mechanic employed in a supervisory position by United Airlines, Inc., at the Charleston, South Carolina, Air Force Base. James is also a shop steward and union representative for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. James's job duties include conducting maintenance and certification of aircraft engines for the United States Air Force. Pratt & Whitney designed and manufactured the aircraft engines on which James works. United contracts with Pratt & Whitney to provide maintenance to the aircraft engines and certify that the engines are safe for use. Despite this arrangement, James is not an employee of Pratt & Whitney but James is employed by United.

In 2000, another aircraft mechanic discovered a crack in one of the engines and notified his supervisor, James. James inspected the crack, confirmed that it was unsafe for use, and reported the damage to United. United's foreman confronted James and the mechanic who discovered the crack and demanded that the damage report be withdrawn. The foreman told James that an employee with Pratt & Whitney demanded that the damage report be altered. After refusing to falsify the damage report, James was called to a meeting with the foreman and a representative from Pratt & Whitney. At this meeting, Pratt & Whitney's representative demanded that the report be altered. Again, James refused to falsify the damage report.

After this incident, James claims that representatives of Pratt & Whitney began showing up at his work area and scrutinizing his work. James asserts that this scrutiny continued over time and became extremely oppressive and hostile. Shortly thereafter, James received a disciplinary notice terminating his employment on November 30, 2000. James was off the job for approximately five months. In the interim, he filed a grievance pursuant to the 609 collective bargaining agreement between United and the union. The grievance procedure reached a positive conclusion, and James returned to his job on April 30, 2001.

2 As a result of this termination, James lost salary and other benefits. Specifically, the complaint asserts that during the time he was unemployed, James suffered lost wages, lost benefits, consequential economic damages, severe emotional distress, and injury to his reputation. The instant complaint was filed on February 6, 2003, alleging that as the result of his refusal to falsify the maintenance report, Pratt & Whitney (1) unlawfully conspired with United to have James terminated, (2) intentionally interfered with James's employment contract with United, and (3) intentionally inflicted emotional distress on James.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332 and 1442, Pratt & Whitney removed the action to the United States District Court for the District of South Carolina on April 2, 2003. On October 10, 2003, Pratt & Whitney filed a motion for partial judgment on the pleadings for dismissal of the claims for civil conspiracy and intentional infliction of emotional distress pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Pratt & Whitney argued that retaliatory discharge alone may not serve as a basis for a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress. Therefore, Pratt & Whitney claimed it was not liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Pratt & Whitney also argued that the claim for civil conspiracy should be dismissed because the complaint did not specifically allege special damages, a pleading requirement under South Carolina law.

The district court held a hearing on the motion for partial judgment on the pleadings on December 30, 2003. At the hearing, the district court orally granted Pratt & Whitney's motion for partial judgment and stated that a written order would follow. During the pendency of the motion for partial judgment, discovery continued between the parties. In his deposition, James conceded that due to the collective bargaining agreement between United and the union, the claim for intentional interference with contractual relations was not viable under applicable law. Pratt & Whitney, therefore, filed a motion for summary judgment on the intentional interference of contractual relations claim on January 30, 2004. On February 10, 2004, the district court issued its written order granting Pratt & Whitney's motion to dismiss the civil conspiracy claim and the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim.

By consent of James, the district court dismissed the intentional interference of contractual relations claim on February 23, 2004. On March 1, 2004, James filed a notice of appeal of the district court's February 10, 2004 order granting Pratt & Whitney's motion to dismiss the claims for civil conspiracy and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

II.

The court reviews a decision to grant judgment on the pleadings de novo, applying the same standard for Rule 12(c) motions as for motions made pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Burbach Broad. Co. v. Elkins Radio Corp., 278 F.3d 401, 405-06 (4th Cir.2002); Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 243 (4th Cir.1999). "Accordingly, we assume the facts alleged in the complaint are true and draw all reasonable factual inferences in appellant's favor." Id.

A.

3 [1] The first ground of appeal is that the district court erred when it dismissed 610 the claim for civil conspiracy. Under South Carolina law, when asserting a claim for civil conspiracy, one must allege and specifically plead special damages. The district court determined that James failed to meet that requirement.

James argues that it is permissible under Rule 8(e)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to plead alternate causes of action or legal theories. He maintains that at the motion to dismiss stage, it is permissible under the rules of civil procedure to plead as many separate causes of action as the facts may support, regardless of the fact that some may be inconsistent or mutually exclusive. He further argues that even if the complaint failed to adequately plead special damages, he should be allowed to amend his complaint under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Pratt & Whitney counters that special damages is an element of the claim that must be properly pled. James's complaint asserts the three claims described above. At the end of the sections asserting the causes of action for civil conspiracy and intentional interference with contractual relations, James uses the same named items of damages: 1) suffered lost wages; 2) suffered lost benefits; 3) suffered consequential economic damages; 4) suffered severe emotional distress; and 5) suffered injury to his reputation as a mechanic and union member in a leadership position. It is this repetition of damages that Pratt & Whitney alleges is insufficient.[FN1]

> FN1. In the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress James does not recite the same demand for damages as in the other two causes of action. In the intentional infliction of emotional distress cause of action, James states that as a proximate result of Pratt & Whitney's conduct, he suffered severe emotional distress and mental anguish. James further states that as a result of this conduct, he is entitled to actual damages, consequential damages, punitive damages, and other damages as determined by the court.

A cause of action for civil conspiracy is defined as "(1) a combination of two or more persons, (2) for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, (3) which causes him special damage." Vaught v. Waites, 300 S.C. 201, 387 S.E.2d 91, 95 (1989) (citing Lee v. Chesterfield Gen. Hosp. Inc., 289 S.C. 6, 344 S.E.2d 379 (1986)). Special damages are defined as "[d]amages for losses that are the natural and proximate, but not the necessary, result of the injury may be recovered only when such special damages are sufficiently stated and claimed." Sheek v. Lee, 289 S.C. 327, 345 S.E.2d 496, 497 (1986) (emphasis in original). "Special damages must be alleged in the complaint to avoid surprise to the other party." Id. (citation omitted).

An early South Carolina case involving a claim and delivery for certain articles of personal property compares general damages and special damages as follows:

> [W]hat are called general damages, as contradistinguished from special damages, are admitted in evidence under a general allegation, -indeed, are inferred by the law itself,-for the reason that they are the immediate, direct, and proximate result of the act complained of, as, for instance, an injury to the property itself, or its value, by detention, etc., while damages which, although the natural, are not the necessary, consequence of the act, being outside of the costs and disbursements allowed by law, and consequently, in their nature, are not admissible in evidence without special notice of the claim in the allegations of the complaint, are therefore called special damages.

*4 Loeb v. Mann, 39 S.C. 465, 18 S.E. 1, 2 (1893) (internal quotations omitted). The 611 concept that a defendant must be on notice of the special circumstances was also found in a breach of contract action. SeeGivens v. North Augusta Elec. Improvement Co., 91 S.C. 417, 74 S.E. 1067, 1069 (1912) (noting that since the complaint unequivocally claimed special circumstances, defendant was on notice and could be held liable for special damages).

Special damages appear to arise in two types of cases other than civil conspiracy: disputes involving real property and causes of action for libel and slander. See e.g.,Smith v. Phoenix Furniture Co., 339 F.Supp. 969, 971 (D.S.C.1972) ("[s]pecial damages in the context of libel or slander, are damages with respect to the property, business, profession or occupation which are computable in money ... [s]uch special damages must be a loss of money or some other material temporal advantage capable of being assessed at monetary value"); Stern & Stern Associates v. Timmons, 310 S.C. 250, 423 S.E.2d 124, 125 (1992) (defining special damages in a suit for specific performance of a real estate contract as "by their very nature conditioned by the particular circumstances of each case ... [t]he party claiming special damages must show that the defendant was clearly warned of the probable existence of unusual circumstances or that because of the defendant's own education, training, or information, the defendant had reason to foresee the probable existence of such circumstances ... special damages are considered within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was signed") (internal citations omitted); Capps v. Watts, 271 S.C. 276, 246 S.E.2d 606, 609 (1978) (stating that in a suit for libel "[g]eneral damages are those damages which the law presumes, without proof, to have resulted from the publication of the libel ... [s]pecial damage is actual damage and must be pled and proved") (quotations omitted); Windham v. Honeycutt, 290 S.C. 60, 348 S.E.2d 185, 187 (1986) ("[s]pecial damages are those that may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time of contracting, as the probable result of the breach") (citation omitted).

There are two key South Carolina cases involving special damages for a claim of civil conspiracy. SeeVaught, 300 S.C. 201, 387 S.E.2d 91; Todd v. S.C. Farm Bureau Mutual Ins. Co., 276 S.C. 284, 278 S.E.2d 607 (1981)rev'd on other grounds,283 S.C. 155, 321 S.E.2d 602 (1984)quashed in part on other grounds,287 S.C. 190, 336 S.E.2d 472 (1985). In Todd, Plaintiff sued his former employer for various causes of action, including a civil conspiracy claim, relating to the termination of his employment relationship with the Farm Bureau defendants. Todd, 278 S.E.2d at 608. The issue presented on appeal was whether the amended complaint properly pled a claim for civil conspiracy. Id. at 610. The Supreme Court of South Carolina ruled that the trial court erred when it overruled defendant's demurrer. Id. at 611. In so holding, the court stated that > *5 [T]he fifth cause of action [civil conspiracy claim] does no more than incorporate the prior allegations and then allege the existence of a civil conspiracy and pray for damages resulting from the conspiracy. No additional acts in furtherance of the conspiracy are plead. The only alleged wrongful acts plead are those for which damages have already been sought.

Id.

In Vaught, a director of sanitation sued the city manager and members of city council for civil conspiracy for terminating his employment without just cause. Vaught, 387 S.E.2d at 92. Partially relying on Todd, the trial court granted summary judgment for defendants holding 612 that no conspiracy existed as a matter of law because Vaught could not predicate his conspiracy claim on the same facts as a breach of contract claim and defendants were the alter egos of the City and, therefore, could not conspire with themselves. Id. at 94. In upholding the trial court, the Court of Appeals held that the trial court had correctly determined that the civil conspiracy action was nothing more than an "embellishment of his breach of contract action." Id. The court concluded that the civil conspiracy claim inadequately pled special damages in that "[t]he damages sought in the conspiracy cause of action are the same as those sought in the breach of contract cause of action." Id. The court further held that the plaintiff in Vaught did the same thing as the plaintiff in Todd in that the complaint "does no more than incorporate the prior allegations and then allege the existence of a civil conspiracy." Id. at 95 (quoting Todd, 278 S.E.2d at 611).

In this case, the district court's decision relies heavily on the unpublished decision of Little v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., No. C.A. 2:98-1879-23, 1999 WL 33291385 (D.S.C. March 3, 1999).[FN2] In discussing the element of special damages, the district court in this case states:

> FN2. In Little, the district court was faced with reviewing twelve causes of action: 1) voluntary assumption of a special undertaking, 2) breach of implied warranties, 3) unfair acts or practices in violation of the South Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act (UPTA), 4) deceptive acts or practices in violation of the UTPA, 5) unfair methods of competition in violation of the UTPA, 6) fraudulent misrepresentation, concealment and nondisclosure, 7) negligent misrepresentation, concealment and nondisclosure, 8) negligence, 9) strict liability, 10) civil conspiracy, 11) aiding and abetting, and 12) loss of consortium. Regarding the motion to dismiss, the trial court noted that the plaintiffs for their civil conspiracy claim re-alleged the damages that they had already alleged in association with all of their other claims. Id. at *14. Unpublished district court opinions are not binding precedence on this court. Loc. R. 36(c)

> The third element of a conspiracy claim requires plaintiff to plead and prove special damages. Essentially, this means that the complaint must describe damages that occurred as a result of the conspiracy itself, in addition to any damages alleged as a result of any other claims. That is, the damages allegedly resulting from the conspiracy must not overlap with or be subsumed by the damages resulting from the other claims.

J.A. 147 (quoting Little, 1999 WL 33291385, at *14). The district court then found that James had not pled a viable cause of action for civil conspiracy because he did not specifically plead special damages. Specifically, the district court stated that "[s]pecial damages are an essential element of pleading a cause of action for civil conspiracy in the first place; one need not make a prima facie case in pleading special damages, but one must at least plead them in order to state a claim." J.A. 149. The district court concluded that James's complaint did not meet this basic pleading standard and granted Pratt & Whitney's motion to dismiss the claim.

*6 Based upon Todd and Vaught, the issue presented in this appeal, therefore, is not necessarily whether the damages pled overlapped, or were subsumed by, the other damages asserted. Rather, the issue is whether James's civil conspiracy claim just incorporated prior factual allegations from the other causes of action then recited the same demand for damages. In sum, the question to be answered is whether James's complaint adequately set forth "additional acts in furtherance of the conspiracy." Todd, 278 S.E.2d at 611.

613 Therefore, the allegations of each of the causes of action must be compared. If appellant failed to allege facts for his civil conspiracy claim separate and distinct from his other two claims, then his civil conspiracy claim would fail under *Todd.*If appellant, however, did allege separate civil conspiracy allegations then the court would need to determine if appellant pled damages that "are the natural and proximate, but not the necessary result of the injury." Sheek, 354 S.E.2d at 497.

The complaint reveals that James adequately asserted independent allegations such that Pratt & Whitney was adequately put on notice that it was being sued for civil conspiracy. Seee.g.,Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N. A., 534 U.S. 506, 511, 122 S.Ct. 992, 152 L.Ed.2d 1 (2002) (stating that "under a notice pleading system, it is not appropriate to require a plaintiff to plead facts establishing a prima facie case"); *see also*Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a) (stating that "a claim shall contain ... a short and plain statement of the claim."). As set forth in paragraph 24, the complaint states in the "Facts" section, prior to the statement of the causes of action, that Pratt & Whitney

> [C]onspired to take unlawful action against the > Plaintiff, to harm him in retaliation for his refusal to participate in action which would have been in violation of his duty as a mechanic, applicable FAA regulations, and that would have put Men and Women of the United States Air Force, and civilian citizens of the United States in danger of injury or death.

J.A. 10.

The language of the civil conspiracy cause of action likewise contains independent allegations of a civil conspiracy that are not identical to the language contained in the other causes of action. J.A. 12-14. Specifically, in the civil conspiracy cause of action, the complaint incorporates James's earlier allegations and then alleges "[t]hat the Defendant conspired and acted to harm the Plaintiff in retaliation for the Plaintiff's refusal to falsify maintenance records concerning the C-17 Globemaster." J.A. 12. Thus, James here did assert independent allegations in furtherance of a civil conspiracy.

[2] Further, an analysis of the damages claimed in the complaint indicates that appellant complied with South Carolina law. In the first cause of action for civil conspiracy, appellant sets forth in paragraph 48 of the complaint the following named items of damages: 1) suffered lost wages; 2) suffered lost benefits; 3) suffered consequential economic damages; 4) suffered severe emotional distress; and 5) suffered injury to his reputation as a mechanic and union member in a leadership position. J.A. 12. Thus, special damages as alleged in this case appear to be a "loss of money or other material temporal advantage capable of being assessed a monetary value." Phoenix Furniture Co., 339 F.Supp. at 971.

7 Under federal notice pleading standards, James is only required to meet the requirements of Rule 8(a) and put Pratt & Whitney on notice of the claim. Obviously, James met that standard here. In addition, under Rule 15(a), James should have been given the opportunity to amend the complaint and properly plead special damages. In addressing the standard for a motion for leave to amend the Supreme Court has stated that "[i]f the underlying facts or circumstances relied upon by a plaintiff may be a proper subject of relief, he ought to be afforded an opportunity to test his claim on the merits. In the absence of any apparent or declared reason-such as ... futility of amendment ... the leave sought should, as the rules require, be 'freely given.' " 614*Foman v. Davis*, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S.Ct. 227, 9 L.Ed.2d 222 (1962).

At the hearing on the motion for partial judgment, the district court specifically addressed the issue of whether the complaint properly pled special damages and whether James would be permitted to amend the complaint. The district court closed the hearing by granting the motion to dismiss the civil conspiracy claim then stating "and if, in fact, there are special damages that [James's counsel] can find, then [James's counsel] can file a motion to amend the pleading ... and you can bring them back in." J.A. 101. In the written order, the district court did not allow James to amend his complaint because it found that "an amendment should not be allowed where it is apparent from the alleged facts that no basis for the separate damages exists." J.A. 149. The district court did not elaborate as to how the basis did not exist. The district court also did not explain how the damages set forth by James did not constitute special damages under South Carolina's definition. By dismissing the claim because of duplicative damages, the district court did not address whether the alleged damages such as lost wages, benefits, and consequential economic damages were the proximate, but not the necessary result of Pratt & Whitney's alleged conspiracy. Thus, the decision of the district court should be reversed and the case remanded in order for the district court to review the issue of special damages in light of this opinion and to allow, if necessary, James an opportunity to amend the complaint to properly plead special damages.

B.

[3] The second ground for appeal is that the district court erred when it dismissed the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The district court ruled that, as a matter of law, James's termination was not sufficiently outrageous to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. James contends that this is not the typical retaliatory discharge case because Pratt & Whitney was not his employer. The allegation is that Pratt & Whitney, a third party, conspired with the employer, United, to have James terminated. It is the involvement of the third party here that James argues makes Pratt & Whitney's conduct outrageous and extreme. Pratt & Whitney counters that the district court properly determined as a matter of law that its actions do not meet the standard for outrageous conduct under applicable South Carolina law. The fact that Pratt & Whitney is a third party is immaterial because if an employer cannot be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress as the result of a retaliatory discharge then a third party certainly cannot be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress as the result of conspiring with an employer to cause a retaliatory discharge.

8 Under South Carolina law, the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress has four elements: (1) defendant intentionally or recklessly inflicted severe emotional distress or was certain or substantially certain that such distress would result from his conduct, (2) the conduct was so extreme and outrageous as to exceed all possible bounds of decency and must be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community, (3) the actions of the defendant caused the plaintiff's emotional distress; and (4) the emotional distress suffered by the plaintiff was severe so that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it. Ford v. Hutson, 276 S.C. 157, 276 S.E.2d 776, 778 (1981) (citing Vicnire v. Ford Motor Co., 401 A.2d 148 (1979)) (quotations omitted).

It is permissible for a court to find as a matter of law that based on the allegations *615 contained in a complaint that a defendant's conduct is not so extreme and outrageous to allow recovery for intentional infliction of emotional distress. SeeTodd, 321 S.E.2d at 609 (stating that "[i]t is for the court to determine in the first instance whether the defendant's conduct may reasonably be regarded as so extreme and outrageous as to permit recovery, and only where reasonable persons may differ is the question one for the jury") (citation omitted). Thus, the question of whether Pratt & Whitney's conduct here was extreme and outrageous may be decided by the district court upon a review of the pleadings.

South Carolina courts have been reluctant to find outrageous conduct in a variety of settings. SeeGattison v. S.C. State College, 318 S.C. 148, 456 S.E.2d 414 (1995) (holding that hostile work environment was not outrageous); Shupe v. Settle, 315 S.C. 510, 445 S.E.2d 651 (1994) (failing to find outrage where doctor mistakenly informed daughter of father's death when father was still alive); Manley v. Manley, 291 S.C. 325, 353 S.E.2d 312 (1987) (finding good faith, involuntary committal of mother to state hospital not outrageous); Folkens v. Hunt, 290 S.C. 194, 348 S.E.2d 839, 845 (1986) (holding "not all conduct ... causing emotional distress in a business setting may serve as a basis for an action alleging outrage"); Save Charleston Foundation v. Murray, 286 S.C. 170, 333 S.E.2d 60 (1985) (holding conversion of promissory note and bringing action on note not sufficient).

In light of this authority, Pratt & Whitney's conduct here was not sufficiently outrageous to maintain the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. James's argument that Pratt & Whitney's conduct here was outrageous because it was a third party and not the employer is a distinction without a difference. It is a short step to infer from South Carolina's case law holding that mere retaliatory discharge does not constitute outrageous conduct, to the holding that a third party's involvement or procurement of a retaliatory discharge does not constitute outrageous conduct. The Court concludes, therefore, that under these facts, the South Carolina courts would not find this conduct so extreme such that it would be actionable for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Thus, the district court's decision dismissing the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress should be affirmed.

III.

9 The judgment of the district court is affirmed as to the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress and reversed and the case remanded for disposition consistent with this opinion as to the claim for civil conspiracy.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART AND REMANDED

C.A.4 (S.C.),2005.
James v. Pratt and Whitney
126 Fed.Appx. 607, 2005 WL 670623 (C.A.4 (S.C.))

END OF DOCUMENT